

Reputation for Excellence

Series of books on Scotland's local printing industries

A history of the Edinburgh printing industry, the first book in this series of local histories of the Scottish printing industry, gives a brief account of the advent of printing to Scotland. It is known that a patent was granted by King James IV in September 1507 to Walter Chepman and Andrew Myllar. The partnership set up business in the Southgate (Cowgate) of Edinburgh. From that time until the end of the seventeenth century royal patents were issued to the trade, thus confining printing to a select number.

The introduction of printing presses to Scotland proceeded slowly. The beginnings in Edinburgh in 1507 were followed after forty-five years by St Andrews in 1552, Stirling in 1571 (for a brief period), Aberdeen in 1622 and Glasgow in 1638.

The three earlier books in this series give accounts of the history of printing in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Dundee and Perth. The fourth endeavours to cover a much wider area: the first part deals with the history of printing in Aberdeen, while the second part covers the Northern Counties.

To order, or for more information please contact: h.williams@scottishprintarchive.org or write to:

Scottish Printing Archival Trust (SC 012320),
% Graphic Enterprise Scotland, 231/233 St Vincent Street, Glasgow G2 5QY